

THAT THRILLING! G!

Pop's Peter Pan surges back with the costliest video ever

MORE special effects crammed into 17 minutes than George Lucas was able to get into the two hours of Star Wars — that's Michael Jackson's new $25 million video Captain Eo.

But you won't get to see it unless you're prepared to go to Disneyland in California or Disneyworld in Florida.

The mini-movie is strictly for the Disney centres, where audiences are flocking in for the "all sensory experience of the decade".

A space adventure co-starring Oscar winner Anjelica Huston, Captain Eo features two new songs from Michael — We Are Here To Change The World and Another Part Of Me.

A new album — his first since Thriller earned him more than $60 million — is due soon and there are plans to tour Europe, Australia and the Far East.

And that's not to mention an autobiography to be edited by Jackie Onassis, Michael's record-breaking deal with Pepsi and another $20 million-plus to put his name to a line of clothing.

The Peter Pan of pop joined stars such as Anjelica Huston, Sissy Spacek, Jack Nicholson and Debra Winger at Disneyland for the opening of Captain Eo — but he was heavily disguised.

"Michael Jackson is here," said bemused Disney chairman Michael Eisner. "But he is disguised either as an old lady or an usher or an animatronic figure."

On a previous visit he wore a surgical mask, having just undergone an operation to place a cleft in his chin and have permanent eyeliner "tattooed" on.
